

The following poems by Edith Speers are from unpublished work

Black and White

Everything on the page is black and white Which might be the only reason why I write.
God knows, it's the only job you could ever pick That will not pay a wage. You have to be thick As two short planks to spend your thoughts and time On poetry. The reason for my rhyme Must be this beauty of the white and black.
The words, once written, can't be taken back Or compromised, no matter how you try.
Oh the freedom from niceness and little lies!
Nothing in life is black or white, they say - But how I hate to see in shades of grey.

exorcism

let go of me you fangs of hell you piercing pairs of teeth that puncture my skull front and back and drag me to your lair your haunts of hell deep deep in the dark jungle drop me you hound of satan you hungering horror or i'll stick in your gorge like a tree that has long thorns very many of them all over every twig and branch of it release me now you dog of damnation you drooling jaws and bloody breath or i will slide down your gullet like a razor blade very smoothly so you don't feel a thing until blood pours out of your eyeballs.

run run run while you can you cur of a conscience for i would love to jump down your throat and sit in your belly like a slow poison and eat my way out through the cage of your ribs and be free ## the angels explain

go to hell - and come back
go to hell - and come back come back alive to tell the story bring us all the gory details of those sad and sorry people you can hear them wailing weeping you are near them - you're the one who can do it if it can be done to span the gap between us we and those who cannot see us

go to hell - and come back go to hell - and feel it for us how the flames of feeling scorch you how the tortures blind your mind till even you whose heart is open will close against us here in heaven here is light and here is laughter - when you're back among us after tell us - did the gifts of love make any difference whatsoever?

go to hell and come back go to hell although you're sent knowing you'll forget you went you'll cry real tears wet tears you'll bleed like sweat and sweat your fears but when you get that final gift - the traitor's kiss - your heart should lift so smile and take it and if you can't smile - fake it go to hell where all the people weep and wail they will give you one nail, 2 nails, 3 nails one two three it's as simple as A B C take it all and let them nail you cry to heaven that we've failed you hear your best friend thrice deny you

- they can sell you but they can't buy you - this is what your death can teach them this is how we'll try to reach them go to hell where so many people dwell then come back to us and tell - when they finally took and broke you when you thought that god forsook you did the light still shine inside you? did the laughter still remind you somehow that you'd go on living? and was your final breath forgiving? it's what we ask of each woman and man go to hell - and learn what you can

Cowgirl's Lament

I rode all the night 'neath the twinkling starlight Across the prairie so lonesome and black But 'twas only near dawn when my horse was half gone That I spied a fresh mark on the track

This dogie was white as the cold moonlight And his hooves never touched the ground I'd followed his trail 'cross the prairie so pale But all night I heard not a sound

Then just as the sun rose, my old pony froze And I made a grab for my rope That dogie stood still and was drinking his fill And my heart it was full of hope

He stood by the pool with its water so cool And I knew beyond any doubt That my rope it was new and my hand it was true And he had no way to get out

It was thanks to his thirst that I'd be the first To touch him with human hand Yes, I'd be the owner of that wily white loner The dogie who had no brand

The canyon wall was both steep and tall The sun burned gold and red But I cared only for the sight shining silvery white Of the dogie as he raised up his head

You may call me a liar but the threat of hellfire Won't change how my good pony shied And though the noose fell just right and I snugged it up tight There was nothing caught inside

Chorus:

Oh you cowgirls young and merry, you should always be wary Of the dogies you chase through the night For the one that you choose will be the one that you lose When you set your heart on moonlight

Boys without Baseball Caps

Boys striding out instead of slouching, boys being brisk instead of mooching along, boys with hands empty but not crammed into pockets boys with hands loose or balled slightly into fists boys together but not talking boys in a loose group of pairs and singles but somehow marching boys sticking together but not being together a group but not a gang boys that are all different but somehow matching a team of boys but with no loud joking larking shoulder shoving boys that look like they have just been released from work from school from supervision and yet still prisoners walking purposefully heading for another destination another place that they have to be at by a certain time as a group not yet free to be loose and loud and playfight like puppies boys all under twenty boys in their teens but not like any teenagers ever before seen boys in black braces black braces like old men boys all with different shirts and tee-shirts but sort of similar trousers trousers not jeans boys in their teens with black suspenders clipped onto trousers not jeans bare-headed boys boys whose hair you can see blond brown and black short sides and back boys without baseball caps boys without billed caps worn backwards farm boys at an agricultural show with no gas or diesel driven anything at a show featuring steam tractors steam cars steam-driven machinery an old-fashioned farming methods show in hot summer blue sky Manitoba Mennonite boys

Easy listening

schmoozy oozy schmaltsy waltzy easy listening moodless music someone's smooth and couth and neutred version of the songs that once were youthful raw and tuneful true and sexy rude and foolish how the young are hard and edgy zigzag angles are their jangling wrangling days while middle age wants undulations corners banked for easy gliding shock absorbers so the riding's smooth and bumpless not so frazzled and frenetic as young love's groin pain grind and panic middle age is never manic hurt or angry loud or eager every coffee creamed and sugared dishes cleaned and dried and stored and wrapped in plastic in the drawers and cupboards are the foods and drinks all saltless zingless bland and tasteless middle age is never restless though it might be always moving not like youth that's pushing shoving screaming at the bars that cage it craving life out-size outrageous that middle age keeps damped down tamped down stored sedated as though they've waited waited waited for the life to be created that they craved and raved and saved for till they cannot grab and claim it laugh and live it as they always swore they'd do when they were young and had no power money freedom just the appetites that need them now all gone now they can feed them now they keep them locked and stored the middle aged are never bored but always boring because they fill their time with hoarding cleaning sorting all the details of the life they could be living oh young and middle-aged and old forget the life that you can hold that's sorted cannistered contained and wrapped up safe from pain and breakage ask the almost dead the dying they will tell you what is truth choose music as you would your youth and live the way youth chooses music and you know you can't go wrong for no one likes a do nothing go nowhere anger nobody make no difference song

when all's said and done reason is a blowfly buzzing around a turd reason is why we can't understand the things we call absurd answers are the maggots when meat goes bad answers are what you get instead of all you might have had logic is a line of ants carrying crumbs to the nest logic can tell you what's right or wrong but never what is best questions are wasps with jaws that are razor-honed they kill blowflies, eat maggots, ignore ants & bite right to the bone